Playing with the Pros

Complete your Evolution to Pokémon Tournament Player

By Steven Diamond

Do you think the Pokémon decks you build are the best in your neighborhood? Have you carefully read all of our “Secrets of Evolution” and “TCG Trainer’s” articles? Then maybe you’re ready to move up to the real test of a Pokémon TCG Master - the challenge of a Pokémon tournament.

Pokémon TCG players can participate in many types of tournaments to test their skills against worthy opponents. Some tournaments are more casual, others are officially-sanctioned. There are also different styles of competition allowing for different cards and decks (although all tournaments require a legal deck of 60 cards). Read on for a glimpse into the multi-faceted world of Pokémon TCG competition!

CASUAL TOURNAMENTS - EVERYONE’S WELCOME!

Casual tournaments are held in many places: Pokémon League, youth centers, game shops, comic book shops, and some of the larger toy stores and bookstores such as Toys ‘R’ Us, Books-a-Million, Zainy Brainy, Noodle Kidoodle and Borders Books. You can usually sign up for a casual tournament on the spot, and the entry fee (if there is one) is generally low.

Casual tournaments are a great place to test your skills against worthy opponents.

There is no standard fixed structure to casual tournaments. Some are run as single-elimination tournaments, in which one loss eliminates you from the game. Only players who win their match advance to the next round. Individual matches may be restricted to 25 minutes in length or may not end until a winner emerges -with some matches lasting almost an hour! Other tournaments are run in the "Swiss pairing" style, where all participants play in each round of competition regardless of how often they win or lose. For each round of a Swiss-style tournament, a player is paired with another player who has a similar win-loss record. In this kind of tournament you might lose one or two matches but - based on your record - you could still wind up a finalist and win the tournament!

The Swiss style allows even those players who come up short every match to continue playing throughout the entire tournament. If you play in a casual tournament you might win a prize, and you will certainly win the respect of your fellow players. However, you won't earn official points that count toward your national standing as a Pokémon player (see the next section on sanctioned tournaments).

DCI-SANCTIONED TOURNAMENTS - GET SERIOUS!

If a tournament organizer wants to make the tournament official, he or she can run a DCI-sanctioned tournament. DCI (Duelists Convocation International) is an organization of dedicated game players (and part of Wizards of the Coast) who play Pokémon and other TCG games. DCI sets guidelines for official Pokémon tournaments and keeps track of the winners. When you play in a DCI-tournament, your wins and losses are registered in a database that keeps track of all DCI-sanctioned matches.

To participate in a DCI-tournament a player must have an official DCI card, available free at any store that runs DCI tournaments. A DCI card carries a unique number that is yours for life. If you participate in official Pokémon tournaments, your DCI number will allow you to be ranked among all the

If you add any Japanese cards to your deck, you must place each card in an opaque-backed card sleeve.

Pokémon players across the United States and even across the world! DCI-sanctioned tournaments are run according to certain rules (available at the Wizards web site at <http://www.wizards.com/DCI/>).

Usually you must register ahead of time to join these tournaments. On the day of the tournament, when you sign in you'll receive a DCI Player Match Record Card. Don't lose this card! The tournament director needs this to record your wins and losses for the day.

DIFFERENT FORMATS OF TOURNAMENTS

Pokémon tournament organizers decide ahead of time what sort of Pokémon decks the players will be allowed to use. One format is called "Pokémon Limited." In this variety, all players receive the same preconstructed deck (such as Grass Chopper or Brushfire) and several random booster packs at the tournament. Each player then constructs an individualized deck on the spot, using only the cards given out. Many players find this format very restrictive, since you cannot design your own perfect deck but must depend on fate to give you good cards in the booster packs.

However, this format does produce a level playing field, since no one can build an expensive deck of rares that other players might not be able to afford.

The more common tournament format is called Pokémon Constructed, where players build their own Pokémon decks ahead of time and bring them to the tournament. Once the tournament begins, you may not change or modify your deck in any way, or you'll be disqualified.

If it is a DCI-sanctioned Pokémon Constructed tournament you may only use English-language cards produced by Wizards of the Coast or their non-English equivalents. You can only use non-English cards if the same cards are available in an English version. In other words, you're allowed to use Pokémon cards from Base sets 1 and 2 and the Jungle, Fossil and Team Rocket expansions. Cards from other expansion sets produced in Japan may not be used.

If you add any Japanese cards to your deck, you must place each card of your deck in an opaque-backed card sleeve to make all your cards appear uniform. You must also have the English version of the cards available to show to your opponent or the judges if they wish to see the Pokémon's attacks or powers. By the way, polite players tell their opponents that they are using Japanese cards in their decks when they sit down to play - it shows good sportsmanship.

Some tournament organizers will allow the use of Japanese Pokémon cards from the Gym series or the latest NEO expansion in constructed tourneys that are not DCI-sanctioned. These tournaments are definitely more on the wild side and can get pretty complicated, especially since some cards are translated differently in different publications. For the best Japanese-to-English translations of Pokémon cards see the "spoiler lists" produced by Jonathan Ng that have appeared in the Beckett Pokémon Collector.

This is a great way for expert players to try out upcoming cards in their decks before they are actually released in English versions.

ON-LINE TOURNAMENTS - THE FINAL FRONTIER!

In an age when you can play traditional games like chess and canasta on-line with opponents from around the world, it's hardly surprising that Pokémon matches - and even tournamnts - have found a home on the World Wide Web.

Of course, you miss the fun of interacting with real-life friends, but many players in small towns around America (and the rest of the world) may have trouble finding enough fellow Poke-fanatics! Playing on-line is a great way to overcome the hurdles of distance and lack of other players, while also testing out your decks against a wide variety of other decks.

To play Pokémon on-line you need three things: Internet access with an on-line chat client, a software application called Apprentice, and Pokémon patch software. Apprentice is a free program officially licensed by Wizards of the Coast

When you and your friend decide to play Pokémon on-line you both start up Apprentice on your computers. You send a message to your friend letting him or her know your Internet address and he or she simply types in that address into Apprentice on their computer. The program takes care of the rest! Once the two of you are connected you both see the same screen on your computer monitors. When one of you places a card on the virtual table you both can see the card being played. The little card icons do not display pictures of the Pokémon nor do they show the attacks or Pokémon Powers of the cards. Such information is available by holding your cursor over the card icons, and a little window opens telling you that information.

Using Apprentice icons requires you to have most of the Pokémon cards memorized in order to play quickly. But if you're desperate for a game and there's no one into Pokémon for miles around, playing Pokémon TCG on-line may be the way to go!

Informing your opponent that you plan to use Japanese cards in your deck shows good sportsmanship.

Although Apprentice was designed for playing Magic: The Gathering on-line, Pokémon enthusiasts have created a free software patch that installs the information on all the Pokémon cards (Base set through Team Rocket) into Apprentice. Once the software is installed, you can build as many virtual decks within the program as you like and use them to battle your friends on-line. Naturally, your friends must also have this software on their computers and be connected to the Internet as well.

The way it works is as follows: Once you are connected to the Internet you must start up a chat program that allows you to chat (type real-time messages) back and forth with a friend.

Pokémon 101

PART 2

LEARN HOW TO SOUND LIKE A PRO AT YOUR NEXT TOURNAMENT

By Steven Diamond

Do you get a little confused when you hear players mention words like mulligan or venucenter? Or why one Pokémon player's Haymaker is better than the other player's Rain Dance?

We've compiled a glossary of Pokémon terms to help you win your next tournament. This guide also explains some terms that started with another trading card game, Magic: The Gathering (MTG). We've done this because some of the MTG terms have become standard in the world of Pokémon. This month's glossary focuses on the terms used for advanced and expert play levels.

GAME-PLAYING TERMS

ARCHETYPE

An "archetype" is something that others copy or imitate because it's so good. TCG players refer to strong original deck types as archetypes out of respect for powerful deck strategies and card combinations that win again and again. Popular archetypes include Damage Swap, Haymaker, Rain Dance, and Stall. Create your own original, unbeatable deck and you could become famous as the inventor of a new Pokémon TCG archetype!

DAMAGE SWAP

This is a deck archetype based on Alakazam's awesome Pokémon Power Damage Swap. The Power description reads: "As often as you like during your turn (before your attack) you may move one damage counter from one of your Pokémon to another as long as you don't Knock Out that Pokémon." The Damage Swap strategy is to get high HP Pokémon like Chansey on your Bench so you can continually move damage suffered by your Active Pokémon to the Big Egg. Then, when Chansey is groaning under the weight of 100 or 110 in damage, use Scoop Up to wipe away all that damage and place a refreshed Chansey back on your Bench.

HAYMAKER

One of the original Pokémon deck archetypes, Haymaker got its name from an early mis-translation of Hitmonchan's "Jab" attack. Haymakers focus on fast, non-evolution attackers: Hitmonchan, Farfetch'd, and Electabuzz. When Jungle Pokémon appeared, Scyther became a Haymaker groupie. A good Haymaker begins inflicting damage from the opening turn. Haymakers also depend on energy denial to keep opponent's big evolutions from powering up. Haymakers do not want to see a game go the distance.

RAIN DANCE

A deck archetype that uses (some say abuses) Blastoise' Pokémon Power, Rain Dance. The Power states, "As often as you like during your turn (before your attack) you may attach one Water Energy card to one of your Water Pokémon". This doesn't use up your one Energy card attachment for the turn. For example, if you have 6 Water Energy cards in your hand and you evolve your Wartortle to Blastoise, you can "Rain Dance" all those Water Energies onto any of your Water-type Pokémon. You aren't limited by the rule of "one Energy per turn." How would you like to shower your Gyarados or Articuno with enough Energies to go on the attack in one turn?

VENUCENTER

This nifty deck strategy focuses on Venusaur's Pokémon Power, Energy Trans. The Power states, "As often as you like during your turn (before your attack) you may take 1 Grass Energy card attached to one of your Pokémon and attach it to a different one." Energy Trans works on both offense and defense. On offense you can power up the Grass Pokémon of your choice for an effective attack. On defense, Energy Trans lets you move all Grass Energy cards to a Pokémon that has no damage counters on it. Then use Pokémon Center to remove all damage counters on Energy-less Pokémon to fully restore your team's health!

CARD ADVANTAGE

Buried somewhere in your deck are the cards you need to win, and Trainers and deck strategies offer ways to get to those treasures more quickly. Bill, Gambler, Professor Oak and Kangaskhan's "Fetch" attack let you draw from (or "cycle" through) your deck faster than your opponent can, giving you "card advantage."

DECKING

At the beginning of your turn you must draw a card from your deck. If your deck's on empty, you lose. This is called "decking." Some Pokémon players build decks with a "decking" strategy in mind. These decks often don't even try to knock out opponent's Pokémon to collect prizes. Their strategy is to stall with big damage absorbing Pokémon and eventually let their opponent run out of cards.

META-GAME

Meta-game describes the overall environment of Pokémon players and decks in your area. First, get to know the types of decks and strategies other players are using at the Pokémon League or tournaments in your area. Create your own custom deck to take advantage of their weaknesses and resist their attacks and you're a "meta-gamer." When you start talking "meta-game," you've become a serious Pokémon player!

MULLIGAN

No, we're not talking Irish stew here! At the start of the game if you deal yourself seven cards and discover you have no Basic Pokémon in your hand, you declare "Mulligan" and show your hand to your opponent. Then return all your cards to your deck, shuffle and draw seven more. Your opponent has the option to draw two extra cards and they usually do.

STALL

A strategy that depends on your opponent running out of cards or "decking" for you to win. Stall decks include Pokémon with high HP to absorb damage, Scoop Up to revive those Pokémon, and other defense and delay tactics. A few stall decks have been created that actually eliminate all Energy cards in favor of only using Trainers and a few high HP Pokémon to stall to the max! Stall decks aim for long games and are criticized for being boring to play against.

WALL

A wall is a Pokémon with high HP or special powers (like Mr. Mime's "Invisible Wall") that absorbs damage during the game so you have time to build up your first or second stage evolution attacker on your Bench. Walls are often temporary and disposable—the self-sacrificing heroes of your deck!
